

Stochastic Processes with Sports Standings

Presented By:

Jason Ocvirk

Tuesday, May 5, 2009

UC 309

The search for stationary distributions within a sports simulation leads to a few interesting observations, namely, the understanding of transition probabilities using both a random and a weighted simulation.

These simulations were used to understand the probability of movement in standings in a current season, as well as the movement of a single team through consecutive seasons.